Catch that Windshield Chip Before It Grows

It's Not a Matter of If a Chip Will Grow, But When...

By Jason Barker

Now that we're heading into Spring and that odd, bright yellow ball known as the sun is re-emerging, you may find yourself distracted by the shiny spot on your windshield... a chip or crack. Ugh!

If you're one of the many people who have come out of the winter with a windshield chip or crack, don't delay getting it repaired. Why? It will eventually spread and become larger. The wind pressure on your windshield, as well as hot and cold temperatures, will see to that. And, more important, it's simply a safety hazard. In addition:

- ✓ Repairing (instead of replacing) a windshield is environmentally friendly. Thousands of damaged windshields are needlessly replaced every year, ending up in our landfills. Repairing a windshield will save it from the landfill!
- ✓ Repairs are very convenient taking less than an hour.
- ✓ Putting off a repair can lead to contamination of the windshield due to moisture from the elements, road grime and car washing.
- ✓ Repairs are better for your vehicle than replacement because the glass is never removed and the original factory seal is maintained.
- ✓ Repairs are more cost effective than replacement because they are often covered by your insurance so it won't cost you anything out of pocket - and it doesn't raise your insurance rates.

Windshield chips are repaired by injecting a special clear adhesive resin. The damaged area is strengthened, preventing the crack from spreading - in fact it's
